Financial Aid Code of Conduct
Santa Fe University of Art and Design Code of Conduct

Code of Conduct for Financial Aid Professionals

Santa Fe University of Art and Design expects its financial aid professionals to always maintain exemplary standards of professional conduct in all aspects of carrying out their responsibilities. Specifically, these duties include all dealings with entities involved in any manner in student financial aid, regardless of whether such entities are involved in a government sponsored, subsidized, or regulated activity. The university believes there should never be any difference between "ethical" and "best" practices.

For purposes of the Code of Conduct (the "Code") set forth below, "financial aid professional" means any Laureate Education or Santa Fe University of Art and Design officer, employee, or agent with responsibilities with respect to educational loans offered by the university. Each of these covered individuals must abide by the Code, and the university must, on an annual basis, provide training on the contents of the Code. If a financial aid professional violates the Code, the consequences include disciplinary action up to and including termination of employment.

The ethical practice is the best practice. To that end, the Santa Fe University of Art and Design's financial aid professionals shall abide by the following Rules of Conduct:

I. Do not solicit or accept gifts or anything of value from any entity involved in the making, holding, consolidating, or processing of any student loans.

No financial aid professional, or member of his or her family, shall accept cash payments, stocks, club memberships, gifts, entertainment, expense-paid trips, or other forms of inappropriate remuneration from any business entity involved in any aspect of student financial aid. Further, no financial aid professional shall accept gifts or anything of value in exchange for placing a lender on Santa Fe University of Art and Design's preferred lender list or for providing some other advantage sought by a lender. For its part, the university shall not engage in any revenue-sharing relationship with any lender or guaranty agency, and no financial aid professional shall agree to any such arrangement.

Gifts include anything of value except the following:

- Standard material, activities, and programs on issues related to a loan, default aversion, default prevention, or financial literacy such as a brochure, workshop, or training
- Food, refreshments, or informational material provided as part of a training session designed to improve the service of a lender, guarantor, or servicer if the training contributes to the financial aid professional's professional development
- Favorable terms, conditions, and borrower benefits on a loan to a student employed by the university as long as those same terms, conditions, and benefits are available to all students
- Entrance and exit counseling services as long as university staff are in control of the counseling and the counseling does not promote specific products or services
- Philanthropic contributions to the university from a lender, guarantor, or servicer that are unrelated to loans
- State educational grants, scholarships, or financial aid funds
This prohibition is intended to avoid both actual conflicts of interest and the appearance of a conflict of interest, which arises when a financial aid professional accepts benefits from a lending institution or similar entity. The fact that the financial aid professional may have no intention to provide an advantage to the lender as a result of the benefit he or she receives, and indeed does not provide any such advantage, does not change the prohibition. The benefit received creates an appearance that he or she may not be impartial and may not be acting solely in the best interest of the students and parents the financial aid professional serves. Such an appearance can do great harm and is prohibited.

II. Do not enter into consulting arrangements with any entity involved in the making, holding, consolidating, or processing of any student loans OR accept anything of value—including reimbursement of expenses—for serving on an advisory board of or as part of a training activity sponsored by such an entity.

Financial aid professionals are prohibited from entering into consulting arrangements or other contract for services arrangements with a lender or on behalf of a lender. Financial aid professionals are further prohibited from accepting trips paid for by an entity involved in the making, holding, consolidating, or processing of any student loans.

Financial aid professionals are also prohibited from accepting anything of value for serving on the advisory board for any entity involved in the making, holding, consolidating, or processing of any student loans. Although there is value in providing lenders with the unique expertise and perspective that only the university's financial aid professionals can provide, receiving any remuneration for such service, even if only in the form of reimbursement for expenses, creates the appearance of a conflict of interest and must be strictly avoided.

The same principle applies to reimbursement for lender-sponsored training activities. Professional development is a key component of being an effective financial aid professional, and attending lender-sponsored training programs can be a valuable way of obtaining the most current information. However, receiving any remuneration for such attendance from a source other than the university, even in the form of reimbursement for expenses, creates the same impermissible appearance of a conflict of interest and must be avoided.

III. Do not take any action for personal benefit.

A financial aid professional shall not take actions that, while on balance may be supportive of the financial aid professional's work, are chosen from among alternatives because they also benefit the financial aid professional. While performing one's work in an exemplary fashion should result in "personal benefit" in the form of professional advancement and recognition, this prohibition relates to actions that are contrary to the obligations a financial aid professional has to the university, its students, and their parents.

IV. Ensure that all information provided is accurate, unbiased, and does not reflect any preference arising from actual or potential personal gain.

When providing information, transparency is the priority at all times. Students and parents should be able to fully understand their rights, obligations, and—of paramount importance—their alternatives.

In terms of the university's preferred lender list, a financial aid professional is expected to demonstrate transparency, completeness, and accuracy of information by ensuring that:

- Students and their parents understand that they are not required to use any of the lenders on the list, are free to select the lender of their choice, and understand the process for selecting a lender and applying for a loan.
The university will not assign a first-time borrower’s loan to any specific lender and will promptly certify any loan from any lender selected by a borrower.

Borrowers are provided with consumer information about the loan products offered by entities on the university's preferred lender list. Such information must include the disclosure of competitive interest rates, terms and conditions of federal loans, high-quality loan servicing, or additional benefits beyond the standard terms and conditions for such loans.

The process through which a student executes a Master Promissory Note preserves his or her right to select the lender of his or her choice.

Lenders who are included on the university's preferred lender list disclose agreements to sell their loans to other entities.

V. Maintain objectivity and transparency in making decisions and advising the university regarding relationships with any entity involved in any aspect of student financial aid.

Financial aid professionals must always be fair-handed when recommending or entering into a business relationship with any entity offering a product or service related to financial aid. A lender may not be placed on the university's preferred lender list in exchange for a prohibited inducement. Placement on the preferred lender list must not be based on benefits provided to the university or Laureate; an officer, employee, or financial aid professional of the university or Laureate; or the university's students in connection with loans not covered by the list.

Placement on the preferred lender list should be based solely on the best interests of the university’s students and parents who may rely on the list. Specifically, lenders are chosen for the preferred list based on (a) payment of origination or other fees on behalf of the borrower, (b) highly competitive interest rates or other terms and conditions or provisions of loans, (c) high-quality servicing, or (d) additional benefits beyond the standard terms and conditions or provisions. See 20 U.S.C. § 487(h)(1)(C) (Sec. 493 of the HEOA). This process is fully disclosed and included on our preferred lender list.

In the same light, no lender may be included on the university's preferred lender list based on promises to provide benefits such as fees, revenue, profit sharing, or other material benefits to the university or Laureate or their officers, financial aid professionals, employees, or agents. Nor may any lenders be selected or offered concessions of any type (including as to number of loans or loan volume) based on an offer to provide other types of funds, such as opportunity pools, to be used for private educational loans by the university.

Transparency also requires that when a student or parent communicates with the university financial aid office, communications only be with university employees. No employee or agent of a lender should ever be identified, either directly or by implication, as an employee or agent of the university. Further, no employee or agent of a lender should work in or provide staffing to the university financial aid office or call center, if applicable. Finally, no lender should be given permission to use the university name, emblem, mascot, logo, or anything readily identifiable with the university to market its products.

VI. Disclose to the university as prescribed by Laureate's conflict of interest policy any involvement with or interest in an entity involved in any aspect of student financial aid.

The goal, again, is transparency and avoiding actual conflicts of interest as well as the appearance of any conflict. All financial aid professionals are expected to strictly abide by Laureate's conflict of interest policy, particularly with regard to any activities, involvement, investment, or interest in any financial aid–related entity. Specifically, financial aid professionals shall avoid any personal investment in or financial relationships with lenders or any entity involved in the making, holding, consolidating, or processing of student loans.

VII. Do not take any action contrary to law, regulation, or the best interests of Santa Fe University of Art and Design students and parents.

Our financial aid professionals work in a complex legal environment. Any doubts as to whether a course of conduct is legally proper should be resolved by referring the matter to the Office of the General Counsel for guidance. In addition, financial aid professionals should understand and adhere to all institutional policies applicable to their conduct and job performance, as well as to all federal statutes and regulations governing the administration of student financial aid and all applicable state and local statutes, regulations, and ordinances.
